

G. H. Mosson

Ripe

The apricot needs to be sucked off;
ruddy half-moons wet the tablecloth,
shudder to sugar.

A black ant—astronaut on a third-story window—peers into a dining room and understands:
Hunger brought me here, ripeness brings me home.