

Consideration

Consider: All is Philosophy,
An eternal, existential debate
All evolving from a common core,
Circling out into the wilds of space;
For there is no energy purer than thought,
And mind always triumphs over matter.

After all, how can it matter
In his or her or their philosophy,
As things are always thicker than we thought
And deeper, causing endless debate
Of dimensions, of time and space,
And the consistency of Earth's core,

Or an apple's – whatever core
Is at issue, it doesn't matter.
There is no set time, no scheduled space
For the talk to rotate to philosophy,
Some will always rise to the debate
And run with it. I always thought

There should be more to it, thought
Something lived beneath, at the core
Things are always thicker, and debate
Is not complete fulfillment, no matter
How tasty the meat of philosophy,
There is much to see, such endless space!

I believe there has to be a space
For things deeper than points, thicker than thought,
Or at least a different breed of philosophy,
Taking into account a theoretical core
Beneath dimensions, beneath all states of matter,
It should be open for debate,

Or even, think it! beyond debate,
Beyond anything that takes up space,
Beyond what colleges teach us matter,
Into another realm, closer than was thought;
To our own inner being, our very core,
An observant, caring philosophy.

The heart of debate is thought,
A space left at the core,
Love matters in philosophy.
